

Emerald Borer Game Materials

| | | | | |
|------------|-----------|-----------------|---------|------|
| Life Cycle | Predators | Characteristics | Habitat | Diet |
|------------|-----------|-----------------|---------|------|

| | | | | |
|------|-------|------|--------|-------------|
| Eggs | Larva | Pupa | Adults | Woodpeckers |
|------|-------|------|--------|-------------|

| | | | | |
|----------------|------------|--------------------------------|--------|------|
| Metallic Green | Very Small | Ash trees in the United States | Leaves | Bark |
|----------------|------------|--------------------------------|--------|------|

| | | | | |
|----------------------------------|--|----------------------|----------------|-----------------------------------|
| Attacks all species of ash trees | Long, narrow, and bullet-shaped with a flat back | Causes bark to split | Brown creepers | White and red-breasted nuthatches |
| | | | | |

Charade Cards

| | | |
|---|---|--|
| Provide food, shelter, and habitat for wildlife and insects | Enhancing water quality and soil fertility | |
| Act as windbreaks, living fences, and shade trees | Having medicinal properties for treating pain and inflammation | |
| Produce wood for furniture, tools, firewood, and baskets | Explain how emerald ash borers harm ash trees in Tennessee and why it is important to make others aware of this problem | |
| | | |